

I am a very satisfied subscriber to satellite radio and feel the cost of my subscription is money well spent to get away from all the commercials and idiotic programming I've had to endure until now. I can now select the type of music I want to hear or any other type of program I choose. I travel by car from coast to coast and now I don't have to hunt for another limited range FM station every fifty miles or so. There should be no constraints put on satellite radio by the competition. They should improve their product instead of trying to limit the content of this new technology.

Sincerely,

William E. Hansen
